

The aim of this thesis is the role of constituent law traditions behind the formation of Nuremberg trials. It tries to answer the question where did the inspiration for this process come from, since it was one of the most important trials in history. The inspiration came mostly from the common international law but in specific cases of aggression the state laws of participating states were implemented as well.