

This thesis deals with the everyday life use of new media and technologies as with a lived practice, theoretical concept and methodological tool. It first provides a sense of the theoretical framework which has been examined by entrance of new technologies to the media studies. Next the tradition of audiences research with focus on ethnography of information and communication technologies is described as an significant part of the discipline.