

Abstract

Diploma thesis is about the activities of Czechoslovak intelligence service in Peru between 1970 and 1989. The main aim of the thesis is a detailed description and analysis of archival documents. The thesis is divided into the theoretical and empirical parts. The theoretical part describes the context and history of the communist security services. In the theoretical part is also defining the use of discourse analysis and special attention is devoted to communist ideology. The empirical part is further divided into two parts. The first part focuses on the description of the intelligence hierarchy, its activities, political context and the role of other secret services. The second part focuses on exploring argumentation strategies, labeling social actors using discursive analysis. At the end of the thesis, research questions concerning the activity and language of a specific workplace of the Czechoslovak intelligence service are answered.
