

Abstract (in English):

This Bachelor thesis deals with the position of adjectives in nominal syntagma in contemporary Portuguese language. The work is divided into two parts – theoretical and practical. In the theoretical part we give a general characteristic of the adjective and we summarize the grammarian's main propositions of its position. We divide the practical part into two chapters. The aims of the first one consists of an elaboration of a list of adjectives and its regular or dominant position and in the consecutive comparison of results with the rules presented in grammars. The second chapter is dedicated to the adjectives which change their meaning depending on their position. Here we present the statistics of the most used Czech equivalents, based on results obtained by an analysis of the corpus project Intercorp.
